We have revised them to ensure that continuity of thought which has always run through them all, but which does not shew quite so distinctly in scattered publications; to these we have added the substance of some of our lectures on Fatigue delivered at the College de France. The leading idea running through this collection has been the necessity for throwing light on certain points in industrial psycho-physiology, which is universally recognised as important at the decisive hour through which we are now passing. Close collaboration between science and industry will be necessary in the near future the importance of this alliance will be greater than ever when the actual crisis is passed and the need for making a fresh start and for increased activity has made itself felt. Now, events have caused a scarcity of labour; it is, therefore, necessary to partly supply its place by as perfect and scientific an organisation of labour as is possible. A great part of life will have to be re-constructed. It is important that this reconstruction should be well devised from the first start, and that it should be based upon scientific rules, so that the unhappy errors of the past may be avoided. This necessity has been so clearly seen that the attention of the Paris Academy of the Sciences has recently been drawn to the importance of the problem, and various measures have been proposed.
