Surviving two of the bloodiest naval battles in history at Okinawa and Iwo Jima, in 1945 made A. Robert Smith feel that a Higher Power was responsible for transferring him off of a ship destined for death and destruction from an enemy kamikaze. Why, he wondered, was he saved from that terrible attack on the USS Sandoval and allowed to live a long, purpose-filled life His memoir, God Gave Me a Mulligan, is the story for how these events played in wartime and how his purpose-driven life evolved. Smith came home from World War II to become a newspaper correspondent, covering Congress and seven presidents Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Ford and Carter and the history-making admittance for Alaska and Hawaii into the Union, leading ultimately to the election of Barack Obama. His life was a series of purposeful adventures for a lad whose talents were less extraordinary than his opportunities. He came out of a small Pennsylvania town, fought for our country, married exceptionally good women, raised four gifted children, published several books, and later founded a spiritual magazine. As a journalist he got to look many a potentate in the eye, and even unnerve a few. Nonetheless, shaking the hands of Queen Elizabeth and a few U. S. presidents never failed to stir him. As Dizzy Dean, the St. Louis Cardinals pitcher, declared: If ya done it, it aint braggin. He done it all right. In his last hurrah event at the Capitol, a senator asked what he had learned from covering Congress for 27 years. Everything is negotiable! he said. Negotiation is how two parties can reach a settlement that they can support. It is the pathway of...
